With the rapid economic growth of China, there is a 'made in China' product in almost every house in the world. This high demand for 'made in China' products is encouraged by the fact that they are cheap compared with similar products made in developed countries.

However, recently, the high demand for 'made in china' products has caused the Chinese to compromise on quality and safety. This has raised alarms all over the world. It has been discovered that many Chinese exports, particularly food products to many parts of the world, have been tainted with chemicals not approved for human consumption. Imported Chinese toys have high levels of toxicity. This is particularly dangerous because these are toys for children who are likely to put anything in their mouths.

This requires that products made for children should be very safe and producers and regulators must both adhere to very high safety standards.
