Full name: .....

English Second Term Test ONE

Many species are under the threat of extinction Because of human activities. Hunters have always killed animals for their ivory, oil and skins. Others have been killed because they attack the farmer's animals. So, the total animal's number has been declined.

Farmers and industrialists in South America like Brazil have cut down a large section of Amazon forests and built many factories and houses. As a result, birds and animals have lost their habitat.

People have polluted the oceans. They have thrown chemical products and oil into seas. So, aquatic species have been died.

That's why governments have decided to establish special parks and zoos to protect these species from danger and live in security.
