English Exam FirstTerm	Duration :02h00

A six-year-old boy from New York has won the respect of US President Barack Obama and thousands of others after he offered to take in Omran Daqneesh, a little boy who was injured after his home in Syria was bombed. The image of five-year-old Omran sat alone in an ambulance, covered in dust and blood, shocked the world and inspired Alex to take action. In a handwritten letter sent to the White House, Alex asked Obama to go and collect Omran and bring him to his house .

Dear President obama,
Remember the boy who was picked up by the ambulance-in Syria? Can you please go get him and bring him to Alex wrote :"In my school, I have a friend from Syria, Omar, and I will introduce him to Omar. We can all play together. We can invite him to birthday parties and he will teach us another language. We can teach him English too, just like my friend Aoto from Japan," .

Obama read Alex's words aloud in a speech he gave at the United Nations , before posting a video of Alex reading the letter himself to facebook. In his message, Obama asked people to read the letter to "understand why he had decided to share it with the world". He said :"Those are the words of a six-year-old boy - a young child who has not learned to be cynical, or suspicious, or fearful of other people because of where they come from, how they look, or how they pray," .

This event collected different reactions all around the world .One Facebook user wrote: "A six-year-old who has more humanity, love, and understanding than most adults. »
