Level :3ALLE	March2020
English Exam Second Term	Duration :0 3h

Juan is one of 800.000 children farm labourers in the United States, half of whom are under 15. Every day, he is up before 5a.m to gather grapes in the field of California. By 7a.m, his eyes start weeping from the sulphurous pesticides in the soil. As the sulphur finds its way into his lungs, he becomes weak and wanting to vomit. Even for an adult, it would be an inhumanly cruel suffering.

In California, Arizona and Washington States, children as young as Juan are employed as cheap labour in the billion-dollar agriculture industry. Juan works illegally: he is an "undocumented" immigrant from Mexico Across the nation, the migrant faces varying hazards. In Washington state the harvesting of apples and cherries runs nearly all year from January to November. Workers arrive from Mexico to face organophosphates- a deadly poison- and a variety of injuries. Many workers have attributed skin problems, headaches and muscle cramps to the chemicals and physical hardship they endure.

A human Rights Watch report last week contained declarations from workers who said they were paid as little as 2dollars an hour while the minimum wage is 5, 15 dollars. And it is still legal for a child to work provided he doesn't miss school for more than 90days in a row.

Democratic congressman Tom Lantos says that many of the mistreatments workers face are illegal "We need greater funds so that laws to protect children will be passed "he adds .Mr. Lantos also wants new pesticides safety limits for children: the current exposure limits are set for a man of 70 Kg in weight.

But as Juan returns tonight to the viaduct beneath which he sleeps, the distinction between man and boys has never been so slight.
