Classes: 3LPH

PART ONE: READING (15 Points)

Ethical Shopping

We all need to eat, drink and wear clothes. Many people in Britain want to know more about the products they buy in shops, in supermarkets or online and how people, animals and our planet are treated when food, drinks and clothes are produced.

The Fair-trade Foundation is an Organisation based in the UK that helps farmers and workers in the poorer parts of the world to earn enough money to live comfortably. The Organisation asks companies that grow products such as coffee or bananas to pay fair wages and provide their workers with good conditions. The companies that follow these requirements receive the Fair-trade Certificate and can sell their products with the 'Fair-trade' mark to international consumers.

Some clothing manufacturers have been accused of employing children and of allowing unsafe conditions in their factories. Following the collapse of a clothing factory in Bangladesh which killed a large number of workers, the British public have started to wake up to the question of where and how their clothes are produced. After this disaster, a number of brands seen in the British shopping centres have made a deal to give money each year to pay for factory inspections and help make conditions safer for workers. People are becoming more interested in where their clothes are made, who they are made by, and in what conditions. They want their clothes to look good AND to be ethical.

In Britain, you can buy cheap used clothes or 'hand-me-downs' from charity shops such as Oxfam. Well-known celebrities are often seen wearing second-hand clothes and accessories. With the help of these organisations, shoppers can make more choices about some of the products they buy, keep them informed and also make fashion a safer business.
