First Term Exam

On week days, British people are busy working all days long. They don't have time to prepare their meals at home. They buy "takeaways". What's a "take away"?

It's a quick meal we get in a restaurant but we take it home to eat. The English "takeaway" is a speciality of fish and chips. It's a kind of fried fish served with chips. We find takeaway restaurants everywhere in Great Britain, like the "Jack's fish and chips corner" restaurant. They are typical of the British life.

On week-ends eating a "Sunday lunch" is a tradition in the British families. The main dishes are roasted beef and the delicious Yorkshire pudding. But the pudding is not a cake and it isn't served as a dessert. It's a kind of salted pie.
