Part 1: Reading and Comprehension

1. Read the text carefully then do the activities:

Education in United States is provided mainly by the government with control and funding from three levels, state and local. School attendance is obligatory at the elementary and high school levels (often known outside the United States as primary and secondary levels).

The ages for compulsory education vary by state, beginning at ages five to eight and ending at the ages of fourteen to eighteen. A growing number of states are now requiring school attendance until the age of 18. Students have the options of having their education held in public schools, private school or home school.

In most public and private schools, education is divided into three levels: elementary school, junior high school (also often called middle school), and senior high school. Post secondary education is better known as 'college' or 'university in the United States.

Most parents send their children to either public or private institution. One tenth of them enrolled in private schools. Approximately 85% of students enter the public schools largely because they are free.

Parents may also choose to educate their own children at home; 1.7% of children are educated in this manner.
